Excerpts from a B-52."Any word that is not the name of a state is worth a pause, worth a few moments of meditation, for it raises the question: What does it mean? And what do I mean by it? In "Falling in Love Again," a poem in his "Out Of This World" series, he wonders about the shape of things to come, and concludes that they will be "as different as any other child." In "Come Up On That Hill," a poem in his "Out Of This World" series, the speaker attempts to make sense of what he sees, but without any explanation of the people on the hill in the center of a field."
