When I submit the form, there are 3 types of errors. 2 of them are not error-free but don't change any data-model so are just for display - the third one is however giving me some trouble. The problem is I get the right data from the 3rd error but the 2nd error (of 2nd type) is overriding it as the data model changes (so it's not submitting the right data). I have tried cleaning the data in all sorts of ways, including a custom cleaned_data() method but nothing seems to work (at the moment I'm not using Postman to submit the data) The relevant part of the code is: from django.http import HttpRequest, HttpResponse from django.template import Context, loader from django.core.files.uploadedfile import InMemoryUploadedFile def clean_data_model(data): errors = [] # Define data where function will get the exact data, remove any error # have return data def clean_data(request): errors = [] data = {'user': data} cleaned_data = clean_data_model(data) # Loop and see if we have errors, add them to errors array for key, val in cleaned_b7e8fdf5c8
